Session B – Cycle Highways and Cycle Tourism: Is There a Synergy?

As a backbone of a regional cycle network, cycle highways connect different cities, towns or major workplaces. They are characterised by a new, higher standard of design, build and maintenance. They also require wider cooperation on regional or even national levels. In return they extend the range of daily cycling from city-wide to region-wide and create new opportunities for active mobility. Can there be a synergy between cycle highways and cycle tourism? The session will explore this question through different stages of cycle highway projects – from planning through design and construction to monitoring and evaluation.
